Cultural Practices

Georgians have a tradition of hosting big dinners called supras, where a table is full of different dishes and people sit around it for hours. The leader of the supra, called the Tamada or the toastmaker, is in charge of keeping the audience at the table engaged. Supra revolves around many toasts, where a tamada talks for several minutes. Each toast has its own theme and the toastmaker must be very good at entertaining a crowd and holding his liquor.

Tipping Guidelines
